THE MICHAELMAN 1978

Comments on this edition: The offices sponsoring this edition (courtesy of The Michaelman editors) hope every member of the campus community may benefit from seeing "who's who" among new students at St. Michael's College this fall. We apologize for the quality of the photos, color ID photos do not reproduce well in black and white. We also regret missing many of the new students' photographs.

St. Michael's history recorded in archives

by Phyllis Grich

Archives are more than just a bunch of ancient books that are only good for collecting dust.

"They are the documents created by the college in conducting the college's business such as budgets and administration reports," the Rev. Henry Nadeau, St. Michael's College archivist, said.

These documents become archives when they are inactive. "When a document is no longer used for the business purposes of the college it becomes inactive," said Nadeau. "After a certain number of years all the documents become inactive and acquire a certain historical value."

Some of the documents are referred to when comparisons or changes are made. "Some records that have a certain importance become more important when there is a change in college policy," said the archivist. "They show progress and changes in the life of the college"

Things that will become archives when inactive are announcements, memos, closed courses for the year, college catalogues, student guides, minutes from the college board of trustees meetings, reports from the college president, student records on microfiche, and other college documents.

"I check in my office to find out how many times these things are looked at," said Nadeau. "If they are still looked at they are still active. In two or three years they should become inactive. That's when they will become archives."

This doesn't mean that when a record becomes an archive it is never looked at again. If a student wants to look at his student record it will be available to him by going to Nadeau's office on the third floor of the library and asking him for it.

A system is being worked out by Nadeau to allow persons to look at most of these documents by request. "I am in the process of formulating a policy of availability of archives material," he said. The reports are never allowed to leave Nadeau's office. "I get the documents for the person doing research and he uses them here," said Nadeau. "What we're handling usually are unique copies. I have to be sure that they are handled properly."

If the person doing research wants an especially old document copied he has to use the copy to insure that the pages of the original won't be ripped or stolen. Nadeau said there was an incident when some of the pages of a report had been stolen. "Some documents are so valuable that there are no other copies," said the archivist. 'When one is taken it is lost forever." There is one requirement for persons wanting to use administration documents. "As of now, persons need written permission from the president of the college or the office whose records are concerned," said Nadeau.

There is a problem with some of the documents dating from 1904 when the college was founded by French clergymen. The bindings on these books of notes are falling apart and must be resewn and rebound. The paper that was used is of poor quality because it contains too much acid, which has caused it to turn yellow and become very brittle. These reports must be sent away to be de-acidified and rebound.

These documents include signatures of the clergy who founded the college on Sept. 29, 1904, and a picture of the construction of Founders Hall. Most of the notes in these books were handwritten in French.

Nadeau has been an archivist since 1973. He is a member of the Society of American Archivists. As an archivist "my responsibility is to obtain the archives, sort them, keep them up and arrange them in a recognizable order so people can get to them," said Nadeau.

Nadeau does parish work on weekends. He has always had another job in addition to doing parish work, except when he lived in England for one year.

Nadeau was an English professor at St. Michael's from 1958 to 1965. He also taught theology here from 1959 to 1961.

North campus: old army fort

by Jerry Proulx

O.K., all you history buffs out there, how much do you think the north campus cost? More or less than the south? Keep guessing until the end, but in the meantime, let me tell you a little about our beloved north campus.

It all started back 'round the end of the Ice Age, when the Onion River (alias Winooski) carved out the plateau on which all of St. Michael's College now stands. Now moving through time we get to the important part, of when St. Michael's was fully established as a college in 1903. Now what does this have to do with the founding of the north campus? Everything!

You see, not long after the affirmation of St. Michael's as a college, there was a war, World War I in fact. Now the plateau on which we stand has always been a favorable site for any army. It was a great asset to anyone who owned it, for it is elevated, surrounded by mountains, near water, and flat. These were the most important features that a base could have, and that is why Fort Ethan Allen was built there.

Back in the old days, there were three ingredients to a strong army, and they were: one, well-trained men; two, dependable firearms; and probably most significant, the vehicles they rode, their horses. That's right! They didn't have many efficient modes of transportation, the horse was the most suitable, and that's why the north campus was the ideal spot to train and maintain the animals.

There was plenty of farmland, and this was a perfect grazing field and an excellent spot to practice maneuvers. So up went the buildings in preparation for World War I. The gym that was used so many years by the St. Michael's basketball team on the north campus was actually the barn where the horses were walked and stabled, but it was renovated for our use. Well, as the story continues, it happens that the war ended, and the south campus kept on growing.

This leads us to Fathers Lyons and Petty, who, at that time, were contemplating the thought of whether St. Michael's should purchase the deactivated fort. Well, before much could happen, something did happen, World War II. The base went into semi-operation, but the cavalry was somewhat obsolete by then, and so the name of the fort was lengthened to Ethan Allen Air Force Base, making way for modern technology. Many men were trained there but it wasn't as it used to be. The base was again de-activated and St. Michael's offered to buy it because of the growing student body.

The government consented. For $7,000 (now you know), Fathers Lyons and Petty got us what was originally the "Pariseau" property, about 30 to 40 acres. Then 22 buildings were removed from the north campus and shifted to the south, the idea being that the farm buildings on the north campus could keep a steady flow of dairy products coming to the south campus. (Imagine getting your cookies and milk from the north campus). A lot of the buildings were also used for storage.

It was later realized that the barracks could be converted to dormitories, and that it would be possible to move some of the overcrowded students on the south campus up there. Most of the foreign students were housed on the north campous, and so two buildings were renovated into what we now call the Sloane Arts and Dupont Language Centers. And then some of the offices were moved up there too. Pretty soon, the north campus was the center of attention for sports, music, art and language. Along with this was the continuing government funded R.O.T.C. program, which is now very much a part of the St. Michael's scene. And now we are left with the product of many years, a proud and very historical north campus.

Warren fills job well

by Shari Young

It takes dedication to fill a job for 20 years in the style that Mary Warren has filled her job in the Saint Michael's post office.

She began her career at St. Michael's in 1958 in the switchboard office. At that time, the switchboard office also housed the post office. Warren alternated between switchboard operator and post office clerk with another woman for 12 years.

In 1970 the post office was moved to the basement of Jemery Hall, where she became head of the department. As such, she is responsible for all mail that comes in or goes out of the office.

Warren said the post office is a registered United States post office and is listed under the Winooski zip code.

Warren said the running of the office is relatively smooth, but enlarging the office would be a wise move.

A proposal was made last year to move the office from Jemery to the basement of Ryan Hall, but Warren said this move would be unwise. She explained that enlarging the present location would be the best solution for Warren.

Warren said a proposal that each student be given his own post office box, which he will use for his entire stay at St. Michael's, has been submitted to the board of trustees. This system would require more space than is available now, but would be much more efficient for post office personnel and students, Warren explained.

William Mazur, director of administrative services, also said that a move from Jemery Hall to Ryan is unfeasible. He would like the office to stay in Jemery and said that with some remodeling the new system of post office boxes would be possible.

Mazur also expressed a concern for the heavy congestion outside the mail window but offered no solution to the problem. He said the congestion was mainly between classes.

When speaking of the office and of her job, Warren expressed much appreciation for the people with whom she works.

During the winter, work-study students are employed in the post office. In addition, Donna Murray, from administrative services,"is a great help in our office too," stated Warren. Warren said the post office patrons are courteous and patient. She explained that the people that one works with help decide whether one will enjoy his job or not, and added that she loves her job.

Fall Semester Fellow announced

This semester's Woodrow Wilson visiting fellow is Dr. Dayton H. Clewell, a member of the board of directors of Mobil Research and Development Corporation. Dr. Clewell will visit St. Michael's Nov. 5-11.

Clewell received his B.S. and Ph.D. degrees from Massachusetts Institute of Technology. After many years in geological research with Magnolia Petroleum Co., he joined Mobil Oil as general manager of its research department, eventually becoming senior vice president for reserach and engineering. Clewell retired in 1977 but still serves on the board of directors.

Clewell has written numerous papers dealing with petroleum research and has served on many councils and committees concerning environmental and petroleum issues. Clewell received the AIME Environmental Conservation Distinguished Service Award in 1974.

He is well versed on such topics as: corporate responsibility, managerial problems in business, energy crisis and social change, multi-national corporations, energy conservation, energy in economic development, business ethics, solar energy anmd industrial research.

Visiting fellows are chosen by the Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation. They are chosen according to criteria such as their concern for young people and ability to relate their knowledge and experience achieved through their careers. Traditionally fellows meet with classes and large audiences but small discussion groups in an informal setting are emphasized as well.

Work study principal form of financial aid

by Jim DeMarco

More than half the student body of St. Michael's College receives financial aid, mostly through the college work-study program, according to Madeline Yandow, director of the financial aid office.

St. Michael's funds 20 percent of the program, or about $50,000, she said. The federal government pays the rest, with the stipulation that the money be spent "for educational purposes only."

Applicants are required to sign an affidavit stating that they will not use the money for other purposes. There are no other measures to ensure that students spend the money only for education, Yandow said.

Eligibility for financial aid is determined by examining the factors that affect an applicant's financial position, such as the total family income and other educational costs.

Students who pay no tuition such as children of faculty and staff are eligible to work up to 20 hours a week if they qualify for financial aid.

Students can be, and have been, dropped from the program if they have not progressed academically in the opinion of a committee headed by Academic Dean Vernon Gallagher, Yandow said.

The school is not allowed to pay work-study students in the form of tuition credits because federal regulations require that they be paid with checks.

All work-study jobs pay the same with the exception of off-campus jobs, which pay 25 cents more per hour for traveling expenses, she said. Off-campus jobs are offered at a number of local non-profit institutions such as the Discovery Museum in Essex Junction and the Howard Mental Health Center in Burlington.

Some on-campus jobs are not related to the work-study program and are available to students through the personnel and placement departments and SAGA food service.

First-semester freshmen are ineligible for the program because the school feels they must adjust themselves to their college workload before applying for additional work, Yandow said.

A forest fire is a shame.
